

FLCC Academic Computing Policies

Access to computer lab facilities is granted to members of the college community for use in their academic work, with the understanding that such access is a privilege and carries with it certain responsibilities.

You may not have food, drink, or their containers near any computer.

Your use of computing facilities must not interfere with others' use of the facility. You must silence any cell phone ring, and you may not talk on a phone in any computer lab.

You may not connect any device to the college network.

You need your own computer account to use most college computers or other resources.

You may not install software, connect or disconnect hardware, alter the configuration, or circumvent security measures on any computer

You may not duplicate copyrighted software, printed materials, or other students' work.

You may not use any equipment in an abusive or unethical manner.

You must not transmit materials anonymously, or as though they came from another person. You may not use subterfuge to avoid identification while using the college network.

You may not display, print, or transmit offensive or damaging materials.

You may not send or receive large files (over 2 MB) except as needed for class assignments.

Your use of computing facilities must not interfere with others' rights to privacy or academic integrity.

You may not use the facilities for recreation, business (either profit or non-profit), personal financial gain, mass mailings, or political purposes.

You are responsible for all activity under your account. You must not use another person's account or enable others to access yours.

You may not engage in any activity which violates federal, state, or local laws.

You should read your student e-mail regularly for important communications from the college or Computing Services.
